The gift for words is genuinely in Penda L. James' DNA. When her beloved mother passed on, Penda discovered that she had written beautiful poetry in her youth and was considered by her friends to be the next Maya Angelou. While she was not previously aware of that, Penda found her calling during her own college years, at Wilberforce University, helping others develop their stories. As the trust and notoriety grew for her superb coaching skills, more and more aspiring authors began to give Penda their writings for her expert insight. This journey led her to compiling her first anthology, Free to Fly - Wisdom for the Seasons in a Woman's Life. She is the author of several inspirational books and journals on goal setting, spiritual development, and faith.

Penda started InSCRIBEd Inspiration, LLC in 2006. She has been called to help you:

Curate your stories of resilience.

A gifted Scribe Coach, she is highly adept at identifying and breaking through writing blocks, having dealt with them herself. She has guided several authors through the completion of published books, music, plays, articles, and academic projects. Her goal is to create a plan to "write through it" and execute it.

Penda's training includes an M.Ed. in Training and Development from Bowling Green State University, certificates in life coaching, film writing and Temple University's Strength Based Family Worker program. Penda's work experience in non profit and social services along with her faith contribute to her mastery in helping leaders reach their goals through words on paper. She holds your hand while holding you accountable.

Penda finds great joy in guiding others through the writing process. Her clients feel heard and nurtured through a journey that many wish to travel but find it easy to delay. She gives you the tools you need to fulfil your dreams. Sharing wisdom from her father, Penda will remind you, "When you write it down, they have your full attention."
